THE GRAND JURY'S REPORT.

The grand jury summoned by Judge Witt, of the Hustings Court, to investigate charges that had been made in connection with the wood contract at the City Home and other city contracts, did their work thoroughly and courageously. They sifted out the idle rumors and dismissed them with a word. But they returned two indictments, and in a separate report severely criticized the conduct of a chairman of a subcommittee of the Council Committee on Relief of the Poor in doing work as subcontractor for a general contractor, under a contract which had been awarded by his own committee, and whose specifications the chairman had himself drawn. The details of this remarkable transaction are given in the grand jury's report, and should be carefully read by the taxpayers of Richmond.

No criminal action or intent is charged by the grand jury, but they condemn the practice as being wrong in itself and contrary to the spirit and intent of the statute.

"If the present statute does not prohibit a city official from entering into a transaction like the above," says the report, "it permits him by indirection to do what it forbids him to do directly; such a principle may readily be more vicious in its results than no restrictions at all."

Our readers will recall that The Times-Dispatch made precisely the same comment when this case was first reported. The grand jury also confirm the view expressed by this paper that the statute should be so amended and enlarged as to cover the case fully and unequivocally, and to prevent violation by indirection.

EDITOR GRAVES IN GOTHAM.

It is a distinguished compliment to the abilities of Colonel John Temple Graves that he has been called to New York to edit Mr. Hearst's morning newspaper. Say what you will of Mr. Hearst, he is a good judge of newspaper talent, and although he and Mr. Graves are personal friends, he would never have chosen the Georgia writer to preside over the editorial columns of his leading newspaper unless he had satisfied himself that his friend was qualified for the work.

We doubt not that Editor Graves will make good, but it remains to be seen whether or not he will find a congenial atmosphere in the editorial rooms of the American and in the city of New York. Henry Grady once took up his residence in Gotham, but he did not remain. The secret of his departure was subsequently revealed by him to Editor Daniels, of the Raleigh News and Observer. He related that as he stood at his front door one morning he saw a white horse standing near by, and finally saw a little white coffin brought out of a neighboring house by the hirelings of the undertaker. It was followed by a man and a woman, supposed to be the child's parents, but by them only. Another woman stood at her door looking on. Mr. Graves asked of her several questions concerning the child's death, and the woman finally replied with some show of irritation: "I'm sure I do not know; it's no concern of mine."

From that moment Mr. Grady determined to shake the dust of Gotham from his feet.

"I resolved then and there," said he, "that I would make my home in no city where the death of a child was no concern of the neighbors."

OUR NATIONAL HOUSE-CLEANING.

Americans are sometimes given to folly, but in a crisis they can show as much ability and good judgment as any people on earth. A notable example has just been furnished in the city of New York. Some time ago the Heinze party from the West, who had made millions in copper, went into the banking business in New York. They purchased a controlling interest in the Mercantile National Bank, and so long as the copper business was booming the bank's affairs flourished. But the bank was used to further the interests of the copper boom, and when the boom collapsed the bank came near collapsing with it. The deposits ran down from $19,000,000 to $10,000,000, and although the bank was solvent, it was so much embarrassed that it was comelled to seek shelter under the clearing house. A crisis was reached last Saturday and there was a feeling of uneasiness, not only in New York, but throughout the financial districts of the whole country. Other banks in New York were more or less involved or indirectly affected, and the situation was serious.

But on Sunday bankers to the number of fifteen, representing the Associated Banks of New York, met in conference at the clearing house, and before they adjourned they took the Mercantile National out of the hands of the Heinze party, put it under different control and made provision to tide it over its troubles. In addition, they examined several other banks of the association that had been under criticism, found them to be solvent, gave them a clean bill and removed them from the pale of suspicion. As a consequence, when the financial district opened its doors yesterday, doubt had been dispelled and confidence restored. It was a good piece of Sunday work and deserves to be recorded with honorable mention. In any event it would have been good business to retire Messrs. Heinze and associates from the banking business in New York; in the present emergency, when the country's interests demand discreet and conservative banking, it is a public benefit. The banks must not be employed as the agents of speculators.

We are having a house-cleaning and the processes are drastic, but we are cleaning up all right, and there will be a vast improvement in the entire establishment when the work shall have been completed.

COMPULSORY EDUCATION.

According to figures issued from the office of the Alabama Superintendent of Education, the State had in the year 1906 66,072 illiterate children between the ages of ten and fourteen years, out of a total of 579,947 in the United States. Since that time Alabama, like the rest of the Southern States, has made rapid educational progress and it is fair to suppose that her percentage of illiterate children has been considerably diminished. In 1906 she had 733,222 inhabitants of school age (five to twenty years). Of these, 238,880 were negroes. In 1904-5 she had 400,000 pupils enrolled in her common schools.

But in spite of the improvement in school attendance, and in spite of the large number of negro children, it is announced from Montgomery that a strong fight for a compulsory education law will be made at the next session of the Legislature. Governor Comer having authorized consideration of such a measure in his call for an extra session. A compulsory education bill introduced at the last session was strongly opposed, owing to some of the provisions, but it is stated that the State Superintendent of Education favors such a law if it be properly drawn.

The demand for compulsory school attendance is growing in Virginia also. Our people are not yet ready for a general law on the subject, but some sections favor it and it is highly probable that a local option measure will be introduced in the next Legislature and carried. This will give to each and every community the right to decide by popular vote whether or not compulsory attendance shall prevail.

THE HONOR SYSTEM.

The true reason of the action taken by the senior class of the academic department of Yale University in rejecting the honor system is now disclosed. It is semi-officially stated that at the joint junior and senior examinations in June, at a first trial of the honor system, several students using dishonest methods were detected by their classmates and that their names became known to members of the faculty also. Classmates refused to report them, and the faculty, under the peculiar conditions, declined to act. It is asserted also that several students using these methods obtained degrees, while other students who were honest at the examinations failed to pass.

Conditions vary in different communities, but no such difficulties as above outlined have been encountered in Southern colleges. The honor system is an institution which the student body established and which it protects. If a student is suspected of having violated it he is tried by a jury of his fellows, and every opportunity is afforded him to clear himself of the charge. If acquitted, well; but if convicted he must pack up and leave. There is no escape. The student body will not tolerate one of their number who has been convicted of cheating in examination. It is the unparadise offense, and the delinquent cannot be shielded.

The honor system is the glory of the Southern college, and may it ever be.

The people of Houston met the emergency yesterday just as the Post knew they would. There was not a particle of excitement in business circles and no hysteria. The banks, the business men and the workmen went about their affairs as usual, confident and in good humor and betraying no uneasiness because of the bank assignment. The trustees are preparing to liquidate all claims against the assignor as expeditiously as possible, and the banking institutions of the city have determined to prevent, as far as possible, any interest, which it is proper for them to protect, from suffering injury.—Houston Post.

This is another example of the good sense and equanimity of the American people. It is that sort of self-control and presence of mind that prevents every form of panic, and it is quite sufficient to preserve the prosperity of the United States.

The President says that he killed three bears, but we feel compelled to remind him that there are a lot of Missourians wandering around in this country.

"Possibly few realize fully," says Publisher Seely, "what it means for Mr.

Graves to be called to edit the New York American." Of course we don't realize fully, but we shall have to regard Mr. Hearst as a tight one if it means less than $10,000 a year.

The Times-Dispatch and Mr. Bryan. "What The Richmond Times-Dispatch has done other Southern newspapers unreluctantly by 'the interests' will do as the force of popular sentiment in the South makes itself more and more felt. It bravely abandons an untenable position and with genuine courage it takes up the people's fight under the standard of the people's hero and champion. The Times-Dispatch simply reads the meaning of what was before its eyes. It rightly interprets the signs of the times. And it is only the first influential Southern paper to do so. Others will follow. Only those which are beyond the reach of popular sentiment can long withstand its over-whelming force."—Johnstown (Pa.) Democrat.

Cases Dismissed.

In the Police Court yesterday morning Messrs. John Brown, Harry Randall, E. Pearson, J. B. Rose and Hugh Hiler, charged with making a disturbance on Laurel Street Sunday evening, were dismissed by Justice Crutched. Messrs. Pearson and Rose explained to the court that they were standing on the corner waiting for a car to take them to church and had taken no part in the disturbance.

THE engagement off the harbor of Scituate, between the American frigate Chesapeake and the British frigate Shannon took place June 1, 1813. The battle of the shoals ships could be seen by hundreds of sightseers from the bluffs of the south shore.

The Chesapeake had just returned from a cruise. So had Captain Lawrence as the commander of the Hornet and as the captor of the British sloop Peacock. But the Chesapeake had been unfortunate in many ways and was regarded as an unlucky craft. When, therefore, Captain Lawrence received his assignment to the Chesapeake he felt loth to obey the order and wrote the Secretary of the Navy for permission to remain in his old ship the Hornet.

Before the reply came from Washington Captain Lawrence received information that a British frigate was inside Cape Cod headlands, apparently looking for a fight, and that she was coolly engaging in target practice. The brave young captain of the tabooed frigate did not wait for further orders. In spite of the fact that he was short of officers, and that the crew was dis-granted over the non-appearance of overdue prize money, Lawrence ordered the ship to prepare for action and bore down toward Boston Light.

According to the official report of Lieutenant George Budd the senior surviving officer of the Chesapeake, the ship left her moorings in President Roads at 12 o'clock. As the Chesapeake passed out seaward by the light the Shannon could be seen in the offing. After maneuvering all the afternoon the two vessels came within pistol range of each other off Scituate at 5:15 o'clock.

Both ships opened with full broadsides that were most destructive, Captain Lawrence then receiving his first wound. A second musket ball soon caused a fatal internal injury, and he was carried below. After a contest of eleven minutes the Chesapeake's crew was overpowered and the ship was captured. The Chesapeake, captive frigate, with all the survivors of the struggle, was taken to Halifax. Lawrence died in four days. His age was only thirty-two, and his first officer, also mortally wounded, was only twenty-one.

At the naval trial, April 14, 1813, of Lieutenant Cox, Dr. John Dill, who was surgeon's mate of the ill-fated frigate Chesapeake, when that ship met the British frigate Shannon, June 1, 1813 off the harbor of Scituate, in Massachusetts Bay, testified:

"Captain Lawrence ordered me to go on deck and tell the men to fire faster and not to give up the ship."

Rhymes for To-Day.

HAPPY HOME POETRY. (As written, particularly, by fellow-bred of the Little-Tot school.)

THERE'S a sweet little tot at my house.

Who's the dearest ever seen; Her eyes are as blue as heaven, And her curls pure gold, I ween; And each evening when I come home She toddles up to the door, And she says: "O daddy, O daddy! Don't you go 'way any more!"

And then I catch her up in my arms And snuggle her up to my chest Till her labials whisk my whiskers— And I guess you know the rest! And a tear slides under my eye-glass (You like Mabel's, don't you, Wick?) 'Tid rather be in the realm, child, Than not to have you here."

No—that is not what I whisper! Let's see—how does the thing go? No touching! 'Twas something quite No touching—

'Twas the usual thing I know! Aye, methinks if I live to a hundred Or 140 or more, I'll still hear that lisp of my darling: "O daddy, O dad," at the door.

And then we tramp on up the stairs, Up, up, up the stairs tramp we— But there, there, there! I'll stop on this stair!

For I've written enough, I see. Don't you like this style of poetry? The ladies say it's the rage; And I am so glad because it takes Just one hour per 7 col. page. H. S. H.

WISTFUL WAITS FROM TEXAS. (From the Houston Post.)

THE Fluffy Ruffles girls of Houston are nine times as fluffy as the girls of Charleston and fifteen times as fluffy as the maidens of Richmond.

On this beautiful Sabbath morning, the good Lord and all his angels are with us in heavenly Houston and all our saintly people are praying for the depraved and sinful souls like Mabel's, Manhattan, Wick's, Washington, Rottens, Richmond and Calious Charleston.

We wouldn't give a lungful of Houston's clamorous October atmosphere for an air-kiss of the dead and stifling vapors of Richmond.

In that great day when every mystery shall be revealed, the first thing we shall want to know is why there was ever a Charleston or Richmond.

We admit the existence of a lofty sentimental regard for Richmond, and we yet expect to imbue the people of that town with an aspiration to reach a purer, better world where people will say it is nearly half as good as Houston.

SOCIAL and PERSONAL

Miss Woodward at Club.

The most attractive social gathering of yesterday was at Woman's Club, where Miss Mildred Woodward delighted a large and fashionable audience with a song recital, her pure, flexible soprano voice being heard to fine advantage in a program that displayed her wide range, tenderness and power.

Miss Woodward had a graceful and sympathetic accompanist in Mrs. Caroline Washburn Rockwood, of Boston, the two fairly capturing the audience in the following numbers:

- (a) Er der Herrliche von Allen, Schumann
- (b) Ouvre Schumann

- (d) Spring song Henchel
- (e) Fleur des Alps Wekerlin

While in Baltimore Miss Royal will be the guest of Mrs. Douglas Gordon at her lovely country home, The Orchids, in Baltimore county, and later at her town residence on Charles Street in the city.

Miss Hoge Entertained.

Miss Katherine Hoge, of Richmond, who is the guest of Mrs. W. E. Meade on Paxton Street, Danville, Va., is being entertained at a number of pretty social functions.

Miss Annie C. Berkeley was the hostess of a bridge party in her honor. After the game and the serving of dainty refreshments, Miss Frances Starr added greatly to the pleasure of the occasion by giving several recitations.

Mrs. Lysander Conway, of Danville, gave a beautiful luncheon on Wednesday to Miss Hoge. Decorations were in yellow chrysanthemums and maiden-hair ferns, and covers were laid for eight.

Mr. and Mrs. D. A. Overby complimented Miss Hoge with a handsome supper at the Danville Country Club Thursday evening. Place cards inscribed with little toasts were unique and witty, and an elaborate menu was served.

Interesting Announcements.

An interesting recent announcement is that relating to the engagement of Miss Georgette Borland, a member of the New York smart set, to Mr. Graham F. Blandy, a wealthy young New Yorker, and the owner of the Tuleuries, a famous Clarke county estate, near Millwood.

Colonel Joseph Tukey, noted for his noble means and hospitality, was the founder of the Tuleuries. It passed after his death into the hands of Colonel U. L. Boyce, former vice-president of the Shenandoah Valley road. Mr. Blandy bought it from Colonel Boyce a few years ago, and divides his time between New York and his Virginia country home.

A former Richmond resident, Mr. Linton Savare Mason, who now lives in Charlottesville, Va., will wed Miss Elizabeth Robertson of Petersburg, Va., on October 30th, the ceremony to be performed in Grace Episcopal Church, Petersburg.
